Katz is a leading luxury interior design and architectural company renowned for creating exceptional properties in some of the world's most desirable locations. Known for augmenting a classic style with an unexpected modern appearance, they were the ideal choice for this 162 square metre apartment in a prestigious residential complex at Ebury Square.

The interior of the apartment is created in a style characteristic of modern London - laconic, reserved, but still vivid and certainly noble. Home to a family with two children, both boys, the client wanted to have a soft, composed, male-style interior, that at the same time would be respectable and expensive. Katz chose a relatively calm and moderate colour palette to fit the brief for this interior - predominantly brown, beige, grey, silver, black, and white - with a few bright coloured furniture items and flowers to add some vivid accents.

A wide living room area is furnished with two big sofas and several armchairs that create a very comfortable lounge for the whole family to gather together in the evenings or to receive guests. Separating this area off from the adjacent dining room required an original solution, so a ceiling-high, custom made mirror cabinet was installed with a fitted fireplace and TV

OPPOSITE: The dining area is dominated by the spectacular Terzani chandelier which is made of thousands of nickel chains which hang down above the table to create an astonishing, festive, blinking light effect screens on both sides. Allowing a view of the flickering fire from both sides adds a warmth and homely feel to both zones.

The splendid dining area was abounded with glass surfaces and cut-glass ware, which was the client's wish. The main accent in the room is a fantastic chandelier by the Italian brand Terzani which is made of thousands of nickel chains that combine to create an astonishing and festive blinking light effect, and is a real statement piece in the room. Carefully chosen bold artwork hangs on the wall beyond the table adding yet more drama to the room. And, as with much of the apartment, a lighting system has been installed to create different moods using day and night lighting modes, as well as a variety of lamps to cast more soft light and solemnity to the atmosphere.

In the grand master bedroom, the wall behind the bed is decorated with an artificially aged mirror surface. An oversized bed head stands proudly against it, furnished in a decorative brown fabric which matches the curtains, and fits perfectly in the calm and moderate colour palette used throughout the interior.

Lastly the children's bedroom was made for two brothers of school age, but in a modern trend it has been decorated without any specific 'children's' elements to the scheme. Instead, the same moderate hues that are used throughout the rest of the apartment are again utilised here, with accent colours coming from two cool blue bed heads, and orange storage boxes at the end of each bed.

The whole apartment retains a luxurious and desirable feel, and Katz have once again created a scheme that meets the clients' requirements and fulfils all their aspirations for the space.
